

FEELING OVERWHELMED by the ream of paper handed out to you at the National Register workshop or the packet of information you received in the mail to guide you in preparing a nomination for the National Register of Historic Places? Maybe you have a tax credit project that is on the fast track and you have neither the time nor the inclination to moonlight as a historian or architectural historian and prepare a nomination. Perhaps you are feeling frustrated after receiving staff comments and changes for the umpteenth time on the nomination you have promised to prepare for your church. If you fall into one of these categories you might want to consider hiring a consultant to help you complete the nomination process quickly and successfully.

The list on the reverse side of this page contains the names of qualified historic preservation professionals who have successfully completed National Register nominations in Iowa during the past three years. They are not the only qualified historic preservation professionals working in Iowa, but are the only ones preparing and presenting nominations to the State Nominations Review Committee (SNRC) on a regular and consistent basis. For a complete list of historic preservation professionals working in Iowa, please go to www.iowahistory.org, click on Review and Compliance Program, and then click on 106 Consultant List.

Please remember, however, that as professionals, these consultants charge for their services. What they charge and what you are willing to pay is a private matter between you and them. From what we have heard, the going rate for preparing an individual nomination can range from as little as $1,000 to as much as $5,000 depending on the complexity of the property, the availability of research materials and published local histories, the amount of time required for completing research and writing, and travel time and distance to visit the property and make a presentation to the state review committee. The cost for district nominations usually runs from $5,000 to $20,000 on up, depending on the size of the district and the number of properties, as well as the factors noted above for individual properties. If cost is a problem, most consultants appear to be willing to negotiate downward on costs when applicants agree to conduct some basic research and provide photographs, etc. The more work you are able and willing to do, the less the consultant will charge.
